SYNOPSIS

Year 2083, the Earth has become a wasteland after years of pollution, developing land for industry, and a lack of environmental policies. Since de-regulation, numerous power plant accidents have occurred and radiation levels have elevated to fatal levels globally. Everything is now toxic, including air and water. Various illnesses have emerged and spread including a new virus that kills all living things. Plants, fish, animals and humans have all perished to varying degrees of extinction and are fighting to survive. A group of survivors living underground is now the only hope for our future as they endeavor to leave the colony on Earth to venture into space in search of a new home planet working desperately to keep mankind alive.

Excellent sound design and world building takes me deep into this troubling future of the Earth. I immediately feel connected to the characters who are excellent portrayed by the actors. The more I listen, the more I get invested in their struggle to survive.
